MENKEN BROTHERS

With characteristic enterprise and intelligence, have taken another step forward in the management of their business. Feeling that no one man can excel at everything, and dropping the fossilized custom (which prevails with many other houses) of sending a single individual to select all classes of goods, MENKEN BROTHERS employ a Trained and Special

Kee, Con Magrue was imported from Cinciunati, where he "had successfully conducted two or three enter-prises of like character," to manage the illicit distilling and arrange for the collection of the assessments on the distillers and recti-fiers. M'Donald went to Washington to secure the release of all the libeled disilleries, and declares that "there was an unerstanding between the President, M'Kee, ord, Joyce and himself, that a ring should e formed, the proceeds from which should nstitute a campaign fund to advance the terests of the administration." To advance irant's assistance he had a $10,000 claim collector of internal revenue at St. Jos avor of Mr. C. B. Wilkinson, of the St. oseph Herald, settled, agreeing to obtain a consulship for his partner, Colonel Bittinger. and to allow him to operate a ring, thus securing the support of an influential journal. M'Kee was secured by his share of the plunder, and General M'Donald says that One dollar entrance; first and second money; Doctor 4, Sampson 4, Ford 2, Maring organ was needed, the Globe M'Kee and the Globe to buy it at Fishback's

M Donald also tells how he had himself ap pointed to a committee of the St. Louis fai association, so as to secure a premium for Mr. Grant's horse, Young Hambletonian, though it was an inferior animal. The story of the storm and the conviction of M'Don-ald covers two years, with the events of which our readers are familiar. It is very well told, and in a postscript M'Donald de scribes a drive with Babcock in October

1874, during which the latter assured him he says, that the District of Columbia ring had everything fixed, having General Gar-field where they could use him, and adding

"Clarfield is one of those easy, clever fellows

*price, which was instantly done. It is added that Fishback's animosity against the ring was intensified by M'Donald's refusal to lend him $5000 for ninety days on consideration of the Democrat's publishing a highly laudatory article on the leader, and on page 148 it is asserted that General Babcock paid $500 to a well-known Washington correspondent to procure the insertion in a Republican paper here of an article to pave the way for a change The first levy on the ring was made in Sep tember, 1871, says the author, and he adds: "Grant's collusion with the ring consisted in Batesville, his utilization of corrupt money to secure his re-election. After this purpose was accomplished I was willing to see the ring organization dissolved, because its ramifications were so extensive and included such a vast number of men of every character that I was in cor stant dread of public exposure." In 1872, is said, $30,000 were sent to Indiana to help the Republicans through. Commissioner Douglass is alleged to have had a guilty knowledge of the ring's transactions, there being adduced a letter of Agent Brasher's reading: "As I desire, particularly, to spend a short time in Kansas, I should be very glad to be ordered to report to you for to you." There are also given several letters to the commissioner in the summer of 1874, when a member of the ring offered to "peach" on being guaranteed indemnity, and complete the summer of the ring offered to "peach" on being guaranteed indemnity, and complete the summer of the ring of the plained that the commissioner's detectives
